£700m cuts ordered in councils' spending

By Hugh Noves and Christopher Warmen The Government yesterday sent a stern letter to local authorities asking them to revise their spending plans for this year to bring them into line with their targets for public expenditure cuts.

Returns show that council budgets are 5.6 per cent or E700m above the Government's target which is for a 2 per cent reduction in local spending over the total in 1978-79.

Local authorities have until August 1 to resubmit their budgets.

It is accepted that the early returns from councils normally contain inconsistencies and that the final spending figures are considerably less, but this time Mr Michael Heseltine, Secretary of State for the Environment, is not satisfied.

In his letter be says that on past experience the present estimated overspending "points to a significant and unacceptable excess volume of current expenditure over the Govern-ment's plans even when allow-once is made for a tendency for budget estimates to exceed outturn".

Mr Heseltine said at a press conference last night that if the Government expenditure plans were to be achieved, local authorities should ensure that their revised expenditure plans should represent the 2 per cent reduction called for.

"Since wages and salaries account for around 70 per cent of gross current expenditure, I have asked authorities to have particular regard to their man-power levels " Mr Heseltine

Earlier, Mr Tom King, Minister for Local Government and Environmental Services, presented the House of Com-mons with the strongest indication yet of the Government's deep concern at the overspending of local authorities.

Sir Jervas Walker, chairman Association of County Councils, said last night he was sure that local government would be much closer to the targets set by the Government when the figures were resulmitted, but he admitted it was inevitable that there would have to be further cuts in services. The difficulty was making the cuts within one year.

The Association of District ouncils said it would obviously consider "Mr Heseltine's letter but it was difficult to see where significant savings, could be made without further affecting services.

Honours list rewards those who helped Zimbabwe settlement

By Ian Bradley

Recognition of those who helped to secure the constitutional settlement in Zimbabwe is a dominant theme in the Prime Minister's section of the Queen's Birthday Honours list, which is published today. Lord Soames, who was sent to Rhodesia as Governor to supervise the transition to independence, is made a Companion of Honour. Lady Soames is made a DBE. It is thought to be the first time that a husband and wife have appeared at so high a level Sir Anthony Duff, who was Deputy Governor of and who has just retired from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, is made a Privy Councillor, a rare honour for a civil servant not at the head of a government department. The other new Privy Councillor is Mr Paul Channon, Minister of State at the Civil Service Department, who stood in for Lord Soames during his ebsence in Rhodesia.

Major General John Acland, who commanded the British troops sent to Rhodesia to knighthood and three other British officials involved in supervising the elections are appointed OBEs.

by police shots loses her baby

From Arthur Osman

Birmingham Gail Kinchin, aged 16, who was shot four times by police marksmen during an incident at Rubery, Birmingham, on Thursday, has lost the baby she was expecting, Selly Oak Hos-pital, Birmingham, said yester-

She had been held by a man armed with a 12-bore shotgun, and was injured when the man allegedly used her as a shield when cornered by the police.

The hospital said that an initial examination had showed no sign of foetal life, and in the course of surgery a baby of about 24 weeks was delivered and confirmed to be dead.

"Other serious injuries are being treated. She is still very ill and is being nursed in the intensive care unit. Her condition remains stable."

West Midlands police have expressed regret to her family. An internal inquiry had started, it was stated.

The incident began when Mr James Wood, aged 40, of King's Heath, Birmingham, Miss Kinchin's stepfather, had been shot at his home. Mrs Wood was forced to drive a man to a house some miles away in the suburb of Northfield where Miss Kinchin was staying. She was taken at gunpoint and police chased the car to a block

Union move allows Grain talks

By Donald Macintyre

The General and Municipal Workers Ufilon yesterday deferred the widening of the Isle of Grain dispute to allow talks on fresh proposals to go ahead with the Central Electricity Generating Board.

The concession by the union representing the 27 laggers at the centre of the dispute came as Mr David Basnett, the union's general secretary, began talks with the board aimed at bridging the gap between the new Trades Union Congress formula and the board's demands over the terms under which the union's laggers should return to

The union shelved for a week its threat to call out from Monday between 400 and 500 laggers at the board sites throughout the country. Negotiations are expected to continue over the next few days.

The board has not accepted the TUC formula which, unlike the previous one drawn up by Mr Len Murray, the general secretary of the FUC, in March, is thought to have the tacit support of craft unions represented in the heavy construction industry. But it made clear last night it believed that the TGWU had effectively accepted its requirements that laggers earnings should be limited to £4.60 an hour.

It has been the laggers refusel to accept, such a ceiling that has been at the beart of the dispute, although that issue was overtaken when other unions cooperated in the recriut-ment and training of men to take over the GMWU jobs.

The TUC document was seen in board circles last night as accepting for the first time that the laggers would have to accept an end to their differential over other skilled grades working in the Isle of Grain,

The Foreign Office view is that the expulsion should be seen as a restrained response to a specific incident and that Libya should not represent the action as part of a concerted campaign against or harassment of the Libyan Government.

Mr Kusa's remarks were consideted a poor exchange for Britain's restraint over recent incidents, although four members of the bureau were with-drawn by Libya at British insistence last month.

By the time Sir Ian spoke in the Commons Mr Kusa had returned to the bureau in St. James's Square to begin clear-ing his office. Dressed in a pinstripe suit and open-necked shirt, he was interviewed at his dask under a portrait of Colonel Goddafi.

. He said The Times interview was not discussed with Sir Ian, but he thought the Government believed "wrongly that the Libyan People's Bureau is organized for assassinations and to kill somebody here they are mistaken. Mr Stonehouse, who was allowed to sit while he gave evidence, said he was forbidden to take full-time employment and worked in the East End with a charity. He was only paid expenses and was assisted by nobody.

He was living in rented accommodation in Ashmore Road, North-west London, and out of his income he would be prepared to pay between £4 and £5 a week towards his debts. "I think a lot of people made silly decisions in 1973 in relation to secondary banking. I suffered along with all the others who collapsed in that year." He had been told by brokers that share dealing was orokers that share dealing was an excellent idea, but with the benefit of hindsight he now realised that a lot of bad decisions had been made in 1973 and 1974.

Mr Jacob Isaac, his counsel, said that Mr Stonehouse had made a serious attempt to re-habilitate himself, but whether a bankrupt or not "he has no credibility any longer in the public eye. He is a broken man.

The question of him doing transactions in business is out of the question and the sooner the cloud of bankruptcy is lifted the sooner there may be a small improvement in his health."

After the bearing Mr Jeffrey Kirschel, solicitor for Mr Stone-house, said it was his Rolls-Royce in which the former minister left the court. Stonehouse's suspension will end on Friday, March 13, 1981, which is Ironic for a man who has been very unlucky. He was particularly happy with the view expressed by the court that his activities in 1973 to 1975, the subject of past criticism, arose as a result of Mr Stonehouse's nervous breakdown, of which the court was entirely satisfied.

Mr Stonehouse wishes to be left in peace to work quietly for charity now. Today we have seen in the court a rare and wonderful thing; the exercise of compassion and mercy at work, it was quite extraordinary see the Official Receiver showing such sympathy, and ther this sympathy seemed to take a greater importance than the other matters."

Methodist move to back Olympics Libyan mission the euphoria as more important way for peace

By Clifford Longley Religious Affairs Correspondent

Support for British participa-tion in the Olympic Games in Moscow has come from an Moscow has come from an official department of the Methodist Church, with a recommendation that it be adopted as policy by the Methodist Conference which starts in Sheffield on June 27.

The international affairs and The international affairs and human rights section of the church states; in its report to the conference that "it is necessary to uphold the rights of athletes to, compete".

Mr Richard Palmer, general secretary of 'the British Olympic Association, said last night: "As a Methodist I am delighted. I think this represents a liberal view which is obviously most welcome."

The association regards this as the most significant endorse-as the most significant endorse-ment of its decision to attend the games that has come from a purely non-political source. The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Most Rev Robert Runcie has said he hopes athletes will not attend, and that reflects the cone of discussion in the Church England. There is expected to be some opposition at the Methodist Conference when the ecommendation is debated. The international affairs and human rights report states: "While we recognize the great importance of action that will give encouragement to those within the Soviet Union who have been outspoken for the up-holding of human rights, and have boldly protested against their country's occupation of Afghanistan, we concluded for our own part that the preservaOlympic Games, was more imwelcomed. It was a trend enportant still; that it was necessary to uphold the right of wall at the practice of other athletes to compete and that international encouragement. In such a case, the guidance could still be given to the dissidents through specific actions taken in connexion with the games as well as by other means ".

Mr John Hastings, secretary of the section, said it had in mind the ways that some athletes had indicated for expressing their protest while taking part, such as refusing to salure the dais or not participating in the terminates. He thought the line being recommended to the conference would be widely supference would be widely sup-ported in the Methodist Church.

The recommendation is one of many published vesterday with the formal agenda for the Methodist Conference.

Speaking at a press conference in London, Dr Kenneth Greet secretary and next year's president of the Methodist Conference, said he hoped the controversial report on human sexuality would not be rejected, but allowed to circulate within the church so that people would come to a well-informed and unprejudiced judgment. The report urges a tolerant policy towards homosexuality, and its critics have attacked it as con-tradicting biblical reaching.

The agenda sets out for the first time a comprehensive guidance on the keeping of confidences with which ministers come to be entrusted. Dr Greet said there was a gradually grow-

tion of every potential instruing tendency to adopt a formal ment for the promotion of type of confession of sins in the world peace, including the Methodist Church, which he states, confidentiality should be absolute. "Only if minister and penitont both understand this is such a ministry of forgiveness possible," it comments.

In other cases of a confiden-tial relationship, a minister ought to obey strict rules. A confidence should not be broken without the permission of the person concerned except in extreme cases, Dr Greet referred to confi-dential information about baby battering as the sort of case where that applied. The guide-lines, he said, laid down that information given in confidence should not be referred to even anonymously in sermons and articles.

I hope that the Nine governments meeting in Venice will jointly have something to say about how they wish to react to the Libyan lawlessness which affects them all.

Sir Ian Gilmour—we are in touch with our partners about this serious matter. There has been a confusion of statements and I cannot reliably tell him what Libyan policy is, but we have made our position very clear.

Mr Anthony Kershaw (Strond, C)—what is the exact diplomatic status of the Libyan mission here? They have refused in some way to appoint people with diplomatic

If they do not wish to have that status, why accord them the privileges of that status? In par-ticular, will the government look in their luggage? (Cheers). Sir Ian Gilmour—We do not wish to exacerbate a difficult situation.

Mr Clinton Davis (Hackney, Central, Lab)—has there been a single word of apology or regret from the Libyan Government, following the British Government's previous action, for seeking to import to the streets of this country their own form of shabby warfare which hazards the lives of our people?

Having regard to what has hapened today, the meeting in Venice should include this matter in the agenda.

Sir lan Gilmour-The answer to sir lan Gimour—The answer to the first part, as far as I know, is "No". The Venice meeting is in progress and there has been discussion. It would not be appro-priate for me to send it orders or requests. We shall have to see what happens...

Revision of Council budgets requested

The last thing the Government pond positively to these requested wished to do, following their request to local authorities to re-examine their current expenditure tions which are implicit in the plans and make a 2 per cent re-duction, was to have to take any further measures. Mr Tom King, Minister for local Government and Environmental Services, said in

Mr Rey Battersley, thief Opposi-tion spokesman on the environ-ment (Birmingham, Sparkbrook, Lab) had asked for a statement on the circular sent out today to local authorities asking them for further reductions in expenditure. ment by August 1.

The volume of current expenditure envisaged last November at the time of the rate support grant implied a reduction of 2 per cent in real terms below the level of actual expenditure in 1978-79.

I have concluded, therefore, that if the Government's expenditure plans are to be achieved all local authorities should ensure that their revised expenditure plans should represent such a reduction. Since wages and salaries account for around 70 per cent of gross current expenditure I have asked authorities to have particular regard to their mannower levels. gard to their manpower levels.

The key to the relationship between central and local govern-ment has always been voluntary compliance by local authorities with the Government's expenditure plans. It is essential, therefore, that local authorities should res-say what punitive actions will be taken against councils?

Can we be categorically assured that that punitive action will not include the much-reported morastorium on new council house building?

Mr King—It is true that budgets always have tended to exceed actual outturn expenditure but on the degree of overspend implicit in the budgets we have received today—some 5.5 per cent or £700m—there is general agreement fust it is necessary to issue this call for revision of budgets.

We are following exactly the procedure observed by the pravious government in a similar vious government in a similar situation, with the exception that our circular does not include some of the later developments which the Labour Government felt it necessary to take. Their Lordships allowed an appeal by the defendant sellers. Stahag Stahl, from an order of Mr Justice Mocatta refusing their application to set aside an order of Mr Justice Robert Goff giving the plaintiff buyers Brinkibon Ltd., leave to issue a writ and serve notice of it upon the defendants

They dismissed the buyers' cross-appeal against the further decision of Mr Justice Mocatta refusing leave to serve notice of the writ on the alternative ground that the breach of contract occur-that the breach of contract occurred within the jurisdiction.

Both parties dealt in steel, the buyers in England acting for a Swiss company, the sellers, in Austria, where they were incorporated.

The buyers, by a telex dated April 26, 1979, offered to buy from the sellers, a quantity of mild steel bars. By a telex dated May 3, the sellers accepted the offer subject to certain amendments. In particular the sellers were only prepared to supply a performance bond of 3 per cent instead of 5 per cent proposed by the buyers, and the sellers stipulated that if freight rates rose for shipments in September and October the price would be in-lated that if freight rates rose for stipments in September and October the price would be increased accordingly. The sellers requested the buyers to open a letter of credit by which the sellers could derive payment through a specified Austrian bank. On May 4 the buyers issued instructions to a London bank to open the letter of credit required by the sellers; but by a telex of Siay 21 the sellers withdrew from the contract. The buyers sought leave to issue and serve notice of a writ alleging breach of contract by the sellers.

Order 11, rule 1 of the Rules of the Supreme Court provides: "... service of a writ, or notice of a writ, out of the jurisdiction is permissible with the leave of the court ... (1) if the action begun by the writ is brought against a defendent ... to recover damages or obtain other relief in respect of the breach of a comract, ... which—(i) was made within the

that the contract was made in England but the repudiation and breach occurred in Austria. Accordingly, he gave leave under rule 1(1)(f), but not under rule

(1)(g).

Their Lordships, like the judge, did not find the case easy and so they allowed Mr Phillips, for the sellers, to adduce evidence of further telexes.

The buyers' case was that the contract was made by the telex of May 3 accepting the offer of April 26, and as that acceptance was not by letter or telegram but by telex it was communicated to the buyers not in Austria but in London where the buyers read it. That would be so, if the telex constituted an acceptance: Entores Ltd v Miles Far East Corporation ([1985] 2 QB 327):

In his judgment the judge rejected that submission, but he found it necessary to introduce the letter of credit, by which his Lordship understood him to have considered that the contract was not concluded by the receipt of the second telex in London but by the opening of the letter of credit, or possibly by the buyers' instrucpossibly by the buyers' instruc-tions to open the letter of credit, in London.

in London.

His Lordship agreed with the judge in rejecting the buyers' case that the second telex concluded the contract. The two telexes did not make a contract. Did the letter of credit make it in England?

Mr Thompson, for the buyers, submitted that enough was done in London to constitute acceptance by the buyers of the terms offered by the sellers' telex of May 3: acceptance by conduct of the offeree need not be communicated to the offeror.

That submission got a little support from the opinion of Lord

Brinkibon Ltd v Stahag Stahl und Stahlwarenhandelsgesell-schaft MBH.
Before Lord Justice Stephenson and Lord Justice Templeman
[Judgments delivered June 12]
The Court of Appeal, in reserved judgments, held that the opening of a letter of credit within the jurisalization in accordance with an offer of the offer, unless and until the intention to accept was communicated to the offeror; and, also, that the repudiation of a contract outside the jurisalization of a contract outside the ju

Incence and no antecedent contract to be varied.

The general principle that an acceptance must be communicated to the offeror applied to the present case. The sellers' counter offer was not accepted until they were notified of the letter of credit by the buyers' telex of May 4, received in Austria that day or on May 7.

On the place where the contract was broken, Mr Thompson submitted that a repudiation was not effective until it was communicated and that as the repudiation was telexed it was not communicated. was telexed it was not communi-cated, on the basis of the Entores decision, until completed at the receiving end in London. If the buyers' machine had not provided an "answer back" or if it had been switched off in the course of the message being tapped out on the sellers' machine in Vienna, the sellers would have been able to recell their repuniation, and as they had taken no irrevocable step until the message was rewas relexed it was not communi-the sellary would have been above to recall their repudiation, and as they had taken no irrevocable step until the message was recorded in London, their breach of contract occurred there and not in Vienna.

Mr Justice Lloyd held, on the authority of Martin v Stout (1925) A C 353) to Atlantic Underpuriting Agencies Ltd v Compagnia di Assicuratione di Milena SpA (1979) 2 Lloyd's Rep 240), that a repudiation by telex sent from Milan was a breach committed in Italy.

In Martin v Stout the Privy Council held that a repudiatory telegram handed to the telegraph office in London constituted a breach of contract committed here and not in Egypt, where it was sent. The simple question, as with all breaches of contract, seemed to have been: where was the repudiatory act done, or where was the unlawful act committed? His Lordship's suswer was the same as Mr Justice Mocatta's, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was, that it was where the person who set the telex in motion was. It was appreciated that that answer distinguished acceptances from breaches of contract. The opposite answer would extend the distinction between telexes on one had and the part of the person was the constant of the person was the constant of the person was the constant of the person was the constant

LORD JUSTICE TEMPLEMAN said that on the material before their Lordships, the sellers' telex of May 3 was a counter offer which required acceptance by the buyers before a counter could come into existence.

The instructions given to the English bank to open the letters of credit only showed that the buyers intended to accept 'the sellers' counter offer. There was no acceptance and no completed sellers' counter ofter, There was no acceptance and no completed contract merely because, unknown to the sellers, the buyers took steps to fulfil a condition precedent to, or partly performed, a contract which they were entitled and minded to conclude by an acceptance communicated to the acceptance communicated to the seilers.

His Lordship considered that the buyers' telex of May 4 constituted an acceptance of the counter offer made by the seller on May 3 and brought into existence a binding contract which was made in Austria when the telex was received in Austria by the sellers. In the result, the the sellers. In the result, the contract was not made within the jurisdiction

Acceptance of an offer must, save in circumstances not mater-ial here, be communicated in orial here, he communicated in order that the contract might be

It might be unfortunate that different consequences followed from acceptance by teler and acceptance by post. It was perhaps comforting that the same consequences followed from reputation by teler and reputation diation by telex and repudiation

His Lordship agreed that the appeal should be allowed.

Bank must disclose husband's account

Regina v Andover Justices, Exparte Rhodes
Before Lord Justice Donaldson
and Mr Justice Woolf. [Judgement delivered June 10]. [Judgement delivered June 10].

Where a woman charged with their of money told police that it was in her husband's bank account, an order made under section 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, authorizing the inspection of his bank account was held to be a proper order even though he was not a party to the proceedings.

The Divisional Court dismissed an application by Mr Philip Ross Rhodes, of Andover, Hampshire, for judicial review of an order of Andover magistrates for the inspection of certain of his bank accounts.

Section 7 provides: "On the application of any party to a legal proceeding a court or judge may order that such party be at liberty to inspect and take copies of any

LORD JUSTICE DONALDSON said that in January, 1978, Mrs Rhodes, the wife of the applicant, At first Mrs Rhodes told the police that the had paid the money into her bank account, but later she said that the money had been into her bank account, but later she said that the money had been paid into her husbend's account. The officers then asked the applicant whether he could confirm his wife's statement. He said that they could get on with what they had to do and left the room. Mrs Rhodes was arrested, tharged and released on ball.

Ten weeks after the interview there was an application under section 7 to the magistrates. The police said that it was necessary to have the evidence contained in the husband's account which would either confirm or refute what Mrs Rhodes had said. The masistrates made the order.

Mr Critchlow maintained that no order should have been made because it was a backstairs method of undermining confidentiality between spouses and went behind the principle that a spouse was a competent although not a compellable witness.

His Lordship did not understand that argument. The evidence was sought of the bank manager. The Act was the machinery by which evidence could be obtained. That was the purpose of the Act.

It was stressed in Waterhouse v Barker ([1924] 2KB 759] and other civil cases, and by Lord Widgery in the criminal case of Williams v Summerfield ([1972] 2QB 512), that the courts had always to take care to consider the circumstances before making as order to see whether it was really necessary, for it was something to see whether it was really necessary, for it was something of an interference with the liberty of the subject. The order gramed was necessary because the husband could not be compelled and the cridence was necessary along the content was released.

Moscow sends helicopter gunships to Ethiopia Nairobi, June 13 .- The Soviet against Muslim insurgents in Union has sent helicopter gun-ships to Ethiopia amid reports that the country's Marxist leadership is planning an attack against Somali forces in the south-east, Western diplomatic Sources said today.

The introduction of the helicopters from the Soviet Union bearing Ethiopian Air Force markings follows reliable intelligence reports that troops of the regular Somali Army have been fighting against the Ethi-opians for the first time since being defeated in the Ogaden war in spring, 1978.

The reappearance of Somali regulars alongside elements of the Western Somali Liberation Front in the Ogaden desert could prove a serious embar-rassment to the Carter Administration, which has been negofaction a military aid package for the Mogadishu regime in return for the use of military facilities for United States forces in the region.

The helicopters, which are designed exclusively for combat, could presumably be used against either insurgents fight-ing for the independence of the north-western province of Eritres or against the Somalis in the south-east. Diplomatic sources said, how

Greece feels threatened German aid to Turkey

The West German Govern-ment's decision to grant Tur-key 10 times as much military aid as Greece has seriously upset the Greek leaders who see it as a direct threat to the delicate balance of military power in the Aegean. Bono intends to give Turkey over the next three years, special military aid worth DM600m (£145m). At the same time it is allotting Greece DM60m worth of military assistance. Ratification by the Bundestag of this decision for aid over and above usual German assistance for the two countries, is still outstanding.

An authoritative Greek

An authoritative Greek source said today there was no formal decision by the Cabinet to decline this German offer as a mark of protest, "but ir is impossible for us to accept it under these conditions", he said. West Germany so far has observed a three-to-five ratio in military aid to Greece and Turkey.

Mrs Thatcher, wearing a blue French act on racial integration

From Ian Murray Paris, June 13.

One of France's most senior Etchegary, Archbishop of Marseilles, spoke out strongly today against "the growing in-security" of the French im-migrant population. The population. Cardinal's remarks, during a service in Marseilles, were made two days after the Gov-ernment announced a new initiative to try to improve racial integration in France. Since 1974 the French Government has increased its spending on immigrants from 250m francs (£26m) to 1,50km francs (£158m) and this week's Cabinet meeting agreed there was a need to do more to try to help integrate the second generation children of im-migrant families within the population. There are just over one million people under 20 years of age in France whose parents are immigrants and the new Government aim is to try to do more to help these calldren integrate into the community. up for the Government "most of these children suffer from accumulated inequalities".

The report found that up to 16.3 per cent of the children of immigrants required special secondary schooling, and that this resulted in a dispropor-tionate number of them being scholastically retarded.

In the past month there have been two large demonstrations in Paris to protest about con-ditions imposed on immigrants and about the way they have to live. There have also been a series of hunger strikes and protests by illegal hunigrant workers who have found themselves trapped into receiving low wages without protest since any complaint to the authorities would result in their expulsion.

The recent spate of strikes in Paris involving the cleaners of the Metro and of the airport et Roissy, a strike which is still continuing, have also been linked with the cause of establishing better conditions for immigrant workers.

'Brotherhood spirit' in churches' talks Rome, June 13.-Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox clergy last month opened nego-tiations on unifying their churches, according to a joint communique published by the Vatican today. It said the 50-member commission, set up to work out a way of ending pine centuries of separation between the Roman Catholic and Orthodox Churches, met on the islands of Parmos and Rhodes from May 29 to June 4. "After centuries of separa-tion a spirit of brotherhood prevailed and permitted this meeting." The commission's main task was to define the procedure and organize details of work for the first phase of the dialogue. "This task has been accomplished." But efforts to unify the churches began in 1964 when Pope Paul embraced Patriarch Athengoras, Parriarch Dimitrios's predecessor, in a gesture symbolizing their desire for unity. Cardinal Jan Willebrands, president of the Vatican Secretariat for Christian Unity, and Archbishop Stylianos of Australia, delegate of the Orthodox Ecumenical Patriarchate, were appointed co-presidents of the "We hope that the reestab-

by Zdenek Mlynář

The wave of liberal reforms which Alexander Dubcek led in Czechoslovakia culminated in the heady Prague Spring of 1968. The stultifying yoke of Stalinism had been loosened. Free speech was permitted and widely enjoyed. At last, it seemed. Marxism-Leninism had been softened and made to work in the interests of the people.

It was to prove a brief dream. By the August of 1968, Dubcek's "communism with a human face " was under military attack from the Soviet Union. Like Kerensky in October 1917, Dubcek and his central committee waited patiently to be arrested and deposed. Zdenek Mlynar, a friend and close colleague of Dubcek's, describes the scene.

Military eircreft bringing tanks and troops to the Prague air-port in Rusyne were rouring over the Central Committee building at increasingly fre-quent intervals on the night of the twentieth, and the building itself began to empty as regional and factory functionaries, and journalists as well, returned to their places of work. Some members of the party leadership and their sides and assistants remained in the building, along with some Central Committee who had managed hearing the news on the radio Towards 4 am I was sitting Dubcek's office along with Dubcek himself, Smrkovsky, Kriegel, Spacek, Simon, Sadovsky, Slavik, Jakes, and Kapek, I am absolutely positive that all these people were present; Barbirek and Rigo may also have been there, but this I'm not sure about Piller, as far as I can recall, did not stay there with us, but I could be wrong about that And Bilak Kolder, Svestka, Indra, Dubcek's office. Ecban may well not even have been at the afternoon session of August 20; at least I cannot remember that he spoke there offere midnight. Sometime after 4 am a black Volga from the Soviet embassy pulled up in front of the Cenlowed immediately by armoured cars and tanks. ## A theatre in a Watermill

"People don't come here to look at the actors", Michael Hordern is reported to have imormed the cast of one of the earliest productions at the Watermill, a theatre which happens to be situated a few yards from his home just outside Newbury in Berkshire, "they come to watch the blasted swans". And not just the swans; they also come to look at the only theatre in Britain which has a mill race flowing through the foyer—curiously no one has yet thought of doing Rosmersholm there, though last summer Gayle Hunnicutt was Hedda Gubler and they have now built a soundproof wall at the back of the auditorium so the actors no longer have to compete with the rush of water. They also have a restaurant where you can order trout caught just a few yards and minutes away upstream; all in all, as Hordern was saying, the actors have a lot to contend with.

Like the Minack on the Cornish cliffs, indeed like Glyndebourne, the Watermill is a miracle of private theatrical eonerprise; some 15 years ago
David Gollins (now staff director with the English National Opera) noticed that his family home in the miniscule village of Bagnor had a picturesque barn over a mill stream then filled (the barn, form machinery. A few weeks later his mother awoke to find her garden filled with timber and a message from her son to the effect that it was for the building of a theatre.

A great deal of local fund-raising got the Watermill open in 1967, which means they are now starting on their four-teenth annual professional repertory season, the second under the management of the actor-director Michael Elwyn.

"Between now and the beginning of October we'll be doing six plays, one classic (Mrs Warren's Profession) and five redent West End successes (Can You Hear Me At The Back, Chouds, Tishoo, Abigail's Party and Move Over Mrs Markhant). Not perhaps the most adventurous season ever devised, but when you've got a stage measuring 20 feet by 15, an auditorium seating only 170 and a budget which will never run to more than a dozen actors you have certain prob-bems unknown to Peter Hail."

Nevertheless the Watermill played last year to 85 per cent capacity and remains 80 per

Michael Elwyn and the Watermill.

Hexagon in Reading, by no means the loveliest of civic centres, but were it not for the Watermill the playgoer in search of regular professional theatre would have to travel as far afield as Oxford, Salisbury or Windsor, for which reason the Mill's catchment area extends beyond Berkshire into parts of Wiltshire, Hamp-shire and Oxfordshire.

All the same, grants are hard to come by, as Elwyn explains: "We're very small, we're not on a bus route, we can't run a winter season until we can afford to get the heat-ing right, and we're in the middle of a very small village which has one pub and no shops. In that sense we can't be called a community theatre; if we ever dropped below a 75 per cent average capacity we'd simply have to close up, so we live in a permanent state of economic crisis." The Watermill suffers (and this I must make clear is my view, not necessarily Elwyn's) like a miniature Chichester from a curious kind of unfashionability. For the last 20 years, most new theatres in Britain have been large concent self-supporting, with small Britain have been large conlocal grants from both Southern Arts and Newbury District and run on massive public subcouncil; through only minutes sidy; a quirky small-scale operation like the Watermill, much for in London.

> "Sometimes, early in the season, when it's raining and there's not much advance booking, you wonder what on earth you're doing here in a field beside a mill stream trying to get actors to work for £70 a week; then a week or so later the sun comes out and the theatre is full and there are people having candlelit suppers in the barn and you still understand relatively little sor Dilly could do about the human brain: investigations whose suphistication would have astoumded earlier neurologists—like monitoring the activity of a single nerve cell-have served as much as anything to indicate the vast amount that remains to understood. As in every other field of human biology, accidents and attempts to relieve pathological conditions have played their part in extending an extraordinary and still con-fusing map: the curious effects of head injuries have shown that, of the brain's two apparently identical hemispheres, the left one manages the right side of the body and the right the left, while different abilities eg, the power of speech-are the function more of one bemisphere than the wher. Quite recently and perhaps most curious of all, the surgical division of the brain to relieve epilepsy, which seemed to im-prove the condition without impairment in other areas, bas suggested that each hemisphere has quite a different role to play: in most right-handers, the left is very good at reason-ing and other predominantly sequential operations while the right is specialized for taking an overview; using his right hand, a split-brain patient seems to be unable to reproduce a three dimensional figure the controlling left hemisphere cannot perceive it as a whole. Perhaps each hemisphere perceives everything around us in quite a different manner.

One thing we can be certain of, however, is that without our full complement, or something very close to it, of that upper layer of the brain, the cerebral cortex, we are not going to be able to function as normal human beings at all. Or are question even that apparently unchallengeable assumption and in Are Brains Necessary? (prolucer David Patterson) pioneer, Professor John Lorber of Sheffield University dis-cussed his findings with Professor Noel Dilly under the able chairmanship of Geoff Watts. Water on the brain—the pop-ular name for the same condition-can fill a large part of the skull cavity, reducing the grey matter to a thin lining, sometimes as little as one milimetre thick against the expected four centimetres. Yet many suffers from the disease in whom the water pressure can be controlled lead perfectly normal lives on what seems to be a fraction of normal brain tissue. In some cases where the fluid can be drained away the vestigial brain appears to regenerate and if this is indeed what is happening. vhat becomes of the belief amounting to certainty that brain cells are incapable of regeneration? How are Professor Lorber's findings to be ex-

In spite of all our efforts, we plained? Neither he nor Professpeculate and this points to one of the programme's additional pleasures, that it was in no sense a confrontation, but a meeting of two highly intelligent and reasonable men, respectful of each other and engaged in the fascinating business of squaring up to what is at present inexplicable. The extent of the terra incognita within the head was further suggested last week by a play, Olwen Wymark's Find Me. Verity, the second of three children of a perfectly sensible and intelligent middle-class couple, has displayed from early childhood some faintly disquieting symptoms: she never smiled, she seemed to lack what her mother—beautifully played by Hannah Gordon— described as "a homing instinct" and would wander off as if without the threads that bind most children to their families. As she grew, she began to show, amongst other things, a fierce regard for what was hers, no regard at all for the property or personal space of others and this she combined with an unfailing sense of how to get under the skins of all who had to do with her. In one view, such behaviour must be the exclusive product of pressures applied within the family, but it was a virtue of Find Me that it qualified this view considerably: this family responded as any family would, with such patient reproof as they could muster, but even that was an irritant and it wore their patience away. In the beginning lay a predisposition too powerful for them; indeed it was easy to see how in earlier we? Here again work on a times such a child as Verity serious pathological condition, hydrocephalus, has thrown into possessed. It was also easy to see what it is that is unnerving in such cases; all of us have the capacity to needle, a fine idea of our own rights and a job remembering those of other people, but few of us have almost nothing else. To see these elements grossly enlarged and flung back at us is more than wel can take-and what a performance Elizabeth Lindsay gave to drive that point well home, and how very convideingly the author conveyed the agonising and destructive effect of such a daughter on her family. But in the end a play like Find Me leaves us with the baffling question: what has happened, what is happening inside a head like that? And is there, as the title hopefully suggests, some other, better me to find? We simply do not

Appealing Elgar

Dream of Gerontius

Hilary Finch

Lest Elgar's cottage garden go unweeded, lest his birthplace with all its still inadequately housed research facilities fall into disrepair; lest, indeed, it be forced to close altogether, the Elgar Foundation has launched a £100,000 appeal. On Thursday, the City of Birmengham Symphony Orchestra and Chorus and the City of Bir-mingham Choir opened a festival of four concerts of Elgar's greatest choral works in aid of that appeal. Akhough as English as a cottage garden, The Dream of Geronthus is also suffused with an Italianate musical expressiveness: it should really feel like a concert performance of a rather sombre opera. Much of the responsibility for this lies with Geroptius himself. Kenneth Bowen, although moving in his portrayal of frail, quivering humanity in the face of death, (particularly in his long duet with the Angel at the beginning of Part Two) was disappointing in the "Sanctus fortis" and whenever the "good, healthy, full-blooded romantic remembered worldliness" that Elgar asked for

When you are as celebrated and accomplished a conductor

as André Previn, and in charge of an orchestra as excellent as the London Symphony Orchestra, you can afford to take risks. It was good to see Mr Previn, in the second of his series of six South Bank concerts, choose a surefire pretation I would lor winner like Tchaikovsky's record, but as an expe Fourth Symphony and attempt something out of the ordinary with it. From the beginning it was clear we were not going to be allowed to wallow in lush romantic harmonies. Mr Previo's tight rein ensured that detail was always sharp and clear but some of the first movement's headiness was sacrificed in the process. The intention seemed to be to reflect on the music's darker qualities and it was certainly an introspective view of the

By 1700 the design of the frame had become more refined. Examples often have mirrored or verre eglomise borders. The increased size of the glass meant more frame, and the carving became delicate, often gilt. From about 1720-1740 there was also a sophisticated method of veneering fret-cut mirrors with walnut. The publication of Chippendale's Director in 1754 spread anglicized Rococo motifs, as well as the Strawberry Hill Gothic touches. The contract with earlier styles is startling in its exuberance, partly because the pine carcass now often used as the framing material leut itself to extraragantly pierced carving, foliated scrollwork, floral pen-dants and even binds and monkeys as prevalent monifs. ## Northumbria's historical extras

A grey blanket of cloud had rolled up around the horizon and was creeping in over the and was creeping in over the entire, sky. A dark and menacing grey, heavy with the threat of rain and the first low mutterings of thunder, ver just the kind of sky to produce a strange, and almost glowing light upon the landscape. Whose light upon the landscape. Where the sun was still shining, the rolling moorland seemed to glitter like an emerald carpet, the green unnaturally bright, and as the car climbed past Crawley Side I turned to take in the view of Stanhope Common to our left and, behind us, the slopes beyond Weardale.

I was once again in the North-east of England and once again discovering places that were new to me. I suppose, after-all the years, I should have been to Weardale and to Tees-dale before but I had not and so my recent journey was allthe more pleasurable for their discovery.

We had come there from Barnard Castle and The Bowes Museum (of which more in a museum (or which more in a moment), taking the B6277 road past Middleton and Newbiggin along the very edge of the River Tees. An "area of outstanding natural beauty" is now its official designation, but one needs no label to appreciate that beauty, especially on such a day as that which we enjoyed. Some local elements had apparently. local elements had, apparently, not wanted such a label and had mounted a campaign against it, but the "Reject AONB" notices bent forlornly on their little posts, bowed in defeat.

We stopped to look at High Force falls where the Tees tumbles between smooth grey and black rocks in a foaming torrent, then swirls smooth and peat-coloured between high banks. On those banks the bluebells crowded and the wild garlic scented the air flercely. A little way farther, just beyond Langdon Beck, we turned the car to the right and climbed across the moors to-wards St John's Chapel and the road which runs beside the River West.

According to my local infor-ments the Teesdale authorities are not parricularly keen to encourage "tourism"—and I can probably guess why—so the Northumbria Tourist Board tends to promote the attractions of the Wear valley fixtead. But who is to stop the Wear valley visitor crossing the moors and enjoying Teesdale? Certainly not the local council.

I wondered if the visitor in July or August would enjoy such solitude as we enjoyed that day (at the end of May) and my companion assured me that very little traffic is to be encountered on those roads even at the height of the holi-day season. I would imagine, however, that Blanchland must attract them for it is a very pretty-village with its grey stone buildings set around a square marking the boundary of the Blanchland Abbay outer Court. The abbev, long since destroyed, was founded in 1165 and tury church. The Lord Crewe Arms in Blanchland incorporates part of a thirteenth century guest house and, as one of the British Tourist Authority's commended country hotels, is likely to prove a good base for a few days there. Close by is the Derwent reservoir, with picnic areas and a country park, and good walking country.

No accident had brought me to this particular part of the North-east. On previous visits I had travelled its coastline and taken in some of its betterknown attractions.

It was designed to anable me to visit a brace of "stately the contents in 1714 and, it is homes" and a trio of museums, claimed, to the castle's ghost, all of which provide much that of the 1st Lord Barnard's of interest to any visitor. Writers who discuss bridge as if it were a game to be played without stakes are displaying the poverty of their inventive powers. Tournament is much inferior to Rubber-bridge because its rules are based on the simplest formulae and are designed to protect players from opponents who are in collusion. As a result of playing with many different partners a player acquires sympathetic understanding in addition to a forceful sonality, deductive powers and, above all, empathy.

Putting the Nervous Nellies to flight

Last week saw a lot of political carts upset, with the apples of discord sent flying. Whose plans turn sourcest will not take too long to discern. But before crowing over Labour's infighting, and now the Liberals' jitters about Mr Roy Jenkins's designs on their patch of centre ground, Tories might care to take a closer look at all this insistence, re-insistence, indeed over-insistence by Mrs Thatcher about holding firm, not being deflected, definitely no U-turns, and

My suggestion is not that the lady protests too much, nor that her crescendo of defiance conceals imminent surrender to those who would change course, or at least trim the sails. It is that she is convincing some of her colleagues that she is intenton her pledge that she would rather... be right and lose the next election. And now she has been told, in effect, that she cannot succeed in time for the next election, and by no less than the Government's guru's guru. How else is one to take the letter in The Times of Friday the Thirteenth from Professor Friedrich von Hayek, of

This monetarist mentor extraordi-pary, whose teachings (via Sir Keith Joseph) Mrs Thatcher has eagerly lapped up in the past, has lately been propounding a big bang theory against inflation, that of swallowing all the bitter medicine at once to have any hope of stopping inflation

Now he says time has run out; even that cannot be achieved in the time available to the Government, unless first of all, the unions are

So he proposes a big bang to get rid of union privileges. Here is the proposal in full:

"As I see it, within the time available what is required can be achieved only if the Government, in the near future, obtains through a referending popular instruction at once to rescind all the special privileges which have been granted to the trade unions by law, and is then ready immediately afterwards to terminate inflation instantly. Only this can make it possible for the beneficial effects of such a policy to manifest itself some time before the term of the present government runs out." Conceding some hesitation over a proposal he describes as "radical" von Hayek nonetheless warms " if the present rightly directed efforts fail because of delay, it may be the loss of the last chance of a British recovery for generations".

Well, a professor, however emment, can be wrong, and perhaps he should stick to economics. But he has a nice eye for Mrs Thatcher's predilection for referendums even if it is playing with dynamite. To get to such a ref-erendum Mrs Thatcher would have to jettison a good chunk of her Cabinet; surmount a rebellion from the left of the Tory party in the Commons; then electorate which even on present discontents with trade union leaders could hardly be expected to surrender all their historic privileges. A recipe for playing into the Labour left's hands before the next election, never mind in it, could hardly be bet-

But what of von Hayek's point,

conian measures the present Thatcher

My point on dwelling on it-at the risk of provoking another letter from the Professor—is that this canker of doubt, although arrived at from a diametrically opposed starting point, is what is now more than ever dividing the Cabinet, and senior and junior MPs and Conservative supporters. The Prime Minister's vibrant rallying cry for all to have faith that it can be done, in her Wednesday speech to journalists, is a sure sign that she feels the need of more allies. She is sure she has had the best of the argument-what little there has been inside Cabinet; and she wants to put the Nervous Nellies to Hight Lord Thorneycroft, another of the Prime Minister's mentors, was doing his bit in his noted speech in the House of Lords. He even claimed at was "a success story" the Government had to tell of consistency in policy and determination. He may have made MPs wince with his demand that they set the country an example by accepting a single digit pay rise, but his most telling phrase was: "There is another reason why I do not think we will go back; it is that we have nowhere

Yet the facts of Britain's present plight, as well as the Government's priorities in facing them, are causing alarm beyond union officials. The CBI cries out for relief. Conservatives like Mr Edward du Cann whose political motives may be which remains, that without such dra- suspect to the left and to the right. nonetheless keep up pleas to the policies simply do not have time to Government not to make the recession worse.

> One Minister last week confided that the economy was being plunged over the cliff of recession, and that he saw little chance of recuperation until it came to picking up the bits. Yet other Ministers reacted sharply to their Treasury colleagues' idea of teaching local authorities a lesson, threatening a halt to all capital pro-jects in council building—an apparent earnest of Mrs Thatcher's yow on Wednesday that "we will do whatever is necessary". And one of the more diffident Cabinet dissenters but his head publicly above the parapet this week. Mr Norman St John-Stevas, leader of the House, in a Bow Group speech of counterpoint (which I regret was not as widely noticed at the time as it might have been) to one by Mr David Howell's, insisted that Government must seek "public consent", and avoid giving the impression that its policies were "part of a dogmatic crusade". He urged that the most painful effects of current policies be utigated in hard hit areas, and that Conservatives do not sit back in a time-of cuts and think nothing could be done to develop social and education services.

The obvious forum for the Cabinet to take stock is the all-day meeting called for July 16. The dissenters, Lord Carrington, Sir Ian Gilmour, Mr James Prior, Mr Peter Walker. to name those who ought to be in the van, will have the chance to argue that the patient not be killed in the cure. All the old remedies have of course been ridiculed in advance by Mrs Thatcher and Lord Thorneycroft. But Mrs Thatcher has, a lot of persuading to do, as do her Treasury team, that the PSBR might not actually go up less fast with some reflation than with the present hardnosed pursuit of cuts and cuts again.

Whatever the depth of the discussion. Ministers, caution firmly against expecting any policy change.

All this must be set against a shift in the Government's propaganda, as if it were no longer sure of its own monetarist orthodoxy. The von-Hayek-Friedman position is that wages do not, cannot cause inflation. Yet Mrs Thatcher is now orchestrating a Ministerial campaign warning that unless pay rises per down below the inflation rate, then that rate will keep on rising. This is hardly pure monetarism, and is but a step away from pay regulation by cash limit which is what the Government says it intends.

The Tory divisions ought to b concentrating Labour's minds. But. the bard fact is that the Labour moderates seem at present demora-lized, with many more believing than saying publicly that Mr Roy Jenkins has got his diagnosis right, even if they do not contemplate joining him. Some are saving they must stay and fight the struggle inside the Labour party—even if it throws the next election to Mrs Thatcher. Surely, it is because the Conservatives very conceivably could throw the election to them that they must carry their fight and win it

Ed Barner, the shrewd manager who does not play golf, and his most rewarding client, Severiano Ballesteros.

To understand the man behind Severiano Ballesteros it is first of all necessary to forget Mark golf's best known manager has so often been linked with that of Ed Barner, the man who does for Ballesteros what FicCormack would no doubt like to be doing, that they appear as deadly competitors playing the same role.

In fact the approach to their business of these two successful entrepreneurs is quite dif-ferent. McCormack is the golfer's man who will talk on the subject for hours and has talent spotters éverywhere. Barner does not talk the golfer's language, he does not play the game nor does he want to learn it. About the time that he was doing a two-year mis-sionary spell for the Mormon Church in Berlin, McCormawas one of Arnold Palmers sparring partners on the fair-

It was Billy Casper, also of the Mormon persuasion, who first draw his attention to the talent of the Spaniard in an interna-tional tournament in 1975. The following year brought Johnny Miller, at that time in Barner's camp, together with Ballesteros in the Open at Birkdale and that autumn the contract was signed; McCormack's wide net had for once failed to catch a superstar, but if Barner is not number one in golf management he has a good deal of what Ballesteros needs.

For one thing Barner has a small enough group of sports clients to take a genuine interest in each one. He could probably not hold a golf club properly but his insight into human nature may be of great-er value. Last March some weeks before the Masters he lanked across a desk in his Los

The production by the prior University Classical Drama Society marks the hundredth anniversary of the first modern performance of an ancient Greek play, also at Oxford. Today we are quite familiar with performances of Aristophanes, Aeschylus, and the rest of the lads through stage, films, television (though familiar is the wrong word for the Royal Shakespeare Company's recent assault upon the Greeks). In June 1880 to perform one of the ancient classics, at Oxford of all places, was a revolutionary and controversial

From its beginnings - the university had a vehement prejudice against the theatre. It preferred its undergraduates to take their classical drama flat on the page, with a chastity belt of learned commentary and variae lectiones. To see the plays performed might excite and corrupt them. A statute of 1593 forbade the poor players from doing their strutting and fretting within five miles of Oxford. By 1636 players for gain had to get the vice-chancellor's permission to

But it was not possible to send down Thalia and Melpomene permanently from Oxford. In December, 1879, some mischievous and stagestruck undergraduates at the House formed an amateur dramatic company and put on a Cox in rooms in Peckwater, As the Dean, the censors and the porters were vexed and tried to stop the performance by forbidding any dinners to be supplied. The Acamemnon' was chosen, and advanced with donnish understatement: "A Greek play could be made quite as interesting on the stage as an English one." Balliol Hall was chosen as the stage, principally because of the enthusiasm for the project of the Master, Benjamin Jowett, the classical scholar and

The Athenaeum complained that the costumes were neither accurate nor harmonious. Gerard Manley Hopkins was interested in a letter only in the few bars of austere music composed for the performance by Patratt; later to be Professor of Music. Without the support of Jowett, who invited such famous friends as Robert Browning and George Eliot up for the performance, it could probably never have taken place. Unfortunately everybody was

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Churchgoers' reaction to changes in liturgy

From Mr John Biggs-Davison, MP for Epping Forest (Conservative) Sir, Roman Catholics as well as Anglicans will applaud your Gallup to the rescue" (June 12). There is a banal convergence of Anglican "Series" and the texts of the Roman Catholic International Commission for the English Liturgy. (For "English", read "mid-Atlantic") You cite Anglicans' dislike of their new marriage service. The Roman Catholic rite of today is about as lovely as the ceremonies provided by Soviet registrars in

I know of one noble, accurate and scholarly English version of the new Roman rite of Mass. It has been Roman rite of Mass. It has been published in the Association for Latin Liturgy's "Ordo Missae" with the requirement that the English page is not used in a vernacular Mass. So at most celebrations of the Eucharist we must suffer a translation until but no the Latin and where he is quieted to atin and, where it is quoted, to Scripture.

The wishes of the Second Valican Popes Council and of successive Popes that Latin be cherished are widely ignored or evaded. The Catholic liturgical revival is in ruins. If, as now, proposed, "sexist" passages are, excised from the Lord's Prayer etc, tragedy will merely have been converted to farce. But our bishops should reflect that those of us who cling to the practice of our religion despite the burdens laid by manipulating minorities are assuredly numbered by those who can bear it no more and have lapsed.

So let Anglicans and Catholics write to oppose the ecumenism of liturgical destruction with the ecumenism of liturgical defence. Yours faithfully. JOHN BIGGS-DAVISON,

From the Deans of Worcester and Sir, The current debate about the relative merits of the Book of Common Prayer and the Alternative Services Book has been so heated that a few sober reflections may be in order. First, the Book of Common Prayer is not to be replaced but will con-ninue to be legally available for any parish which wishes to use it, whether occasionally or regularly.

Secondly, the continuing wide-spread and illegal use of much spread and illegal use of much meterial from the Deposited Book of 1928, to say nothing of meterial from the Roman Missal, makes it abundantly plain that the imposition of the Book of Common Preyer as the only authorized form of worship in the Church of England is not a live option. Thirdly, many of the imperfec-tions of the Alternative Services Book are due, in no small measure, to the fact that for centuries the Church of England has been inhibited from revising its own forms of worship by its state connection, rigidly interpreted by a Parliament many of whose members are neither Anglicans nor Christian.

Finally, the admitted defects of to be balanced by its evident merits, not least its clearer structure, its encouragement of congregational participation and its sensitivity to the traditions of worship of other. Christians. It is surely significant that all the mainstream Christian churches (apert from the Eastern Orthodox) have recently revised their liturgies, none more radically than the Roman Catholic Church. yours faithfully,

Sir. It is difficult to imagine what constituency Gallup Poll must have chosen to have arrived at the erratio conclusions which are the basis of your article (June 12) and your correspondent's judgment. The new services of the Church of England are only introduced with the good-will of parish church councils. They have been widely accepted, and from my observation are generally in use in parishes where there is a lively liturgical life. To describe the. situation as a "split" in the Church of Eucland is totally without foundstion. That there was some spasmodic resistance to the proposals was only to be expected, but the voring of the representative Synod was heavily in favour of their adoption. There, is no proposal to abolish the 1562 book; and if and where it is preferred, it can still be used. The more drastic change of the Roman Catholic Church from the Latin Tridentine Mass to the Missa Normativa was adopted without extensive protest, even allowing for the fact that the machinery for lay protest in the Roman Catholic church does not exist. There seemed to have been no such protest voiced. in the recent Pastoral Council.

The "archaic" has a precision which cannot be equalled. can a single contemporary word perform as well? The other point is one of "relevance". It appears that the Authorized Version and 1052 are Authorized Version and 1662 are not "relevant". The new prayer book", we were told at a recent conference, "is the fruit of more than a decade of labour, and will bring the liferry into the eighties. There was silence when I asked who was currently hard at work bringing the liturgy into the ninetias. It is not only humour that the modernists lack, but common sense. From Conor D. H. Sishop

Sir. Your leading article "Gallup, to the rescue" made some strange assumptions which should not go unchallenged. Perhaps they were strange, because it ignored what Christianity and the church are all about it assumed that to develop from an earlier prayer book to a newer one, in other words to recognewer one, in omer worms to recognize their one outgrows one's clothes, was a religious loss. Perhaps it is, but it is certainly not a Christian one. Again the assumption was that the exercise had been merely a dressing up of public worship in standard modern English. This ignored the fact that changes had have much more perfound for they. een much more profound, for they. had involved a restructuring of worship itself.

As for the necessity that liturgical language should be "dignified, solemu, resonant, universal, hierasolemu, resonant, universal, hieratic and unfashionable." I see little historical precedent for that claim as I think you mean it to be. At his best liturgy, has been understandable, celebratory and contemporary. I find little of the qualities that yoursegard as essential to worship in the life of our Lord on which, presumably, our worship is based. I see much that is of this world, compassionate, understanding, sensitive.

The remoteness and astiquerinnism that you appear to favour is a far cry from Christian worship. It would have been a worthwhile study investigating which people rather than how many favoured your approach. Many of us are golf, approach. Many of us are concerned with communicating the Christian faith, and are anxious to be provided with adequate tools to do the job, and we recognize that tools have to be changed when they wear out or when the work demanded of them changes.

Most certainly the changes that have been made were not made exclusively for the sake of the young any more, thank goodness, than change will be held up by over-concern with those whose primary interest is the preservation of a questionable aesthetic rather than with the continuance of a living Christian faith.

Yours faithfully, DAVID H. BISHOP, 26 The Close, June 12.

From Conon H. L. H. Townshend Sir. Reading your leader, "Gallup to the rescue". I am surprised at the claim that three out of four of the full poll preferred the Prayer Book—that is the 1662—marriage screice, because I would question how many of them have ever been to a service at which it was used. In the whole of my ministry, during which I have officiated at well over a thousand weddings. I have never used it once, since the normal service for the last 50 years until very recently has been the .1928 "illegal" rite.

. Also, I wonder how many of the nine-tenths, who claim to prefer the old version have ever been to Series 3 wedding, with its posirive and constructive attitude to marriage. My own experience in recent years is that when the couple concerned choose it, which they normally do after studying the alternatives, it is greatly appreciated, both by them and by their friends.

Finally, I confess that I would love to know how many of the "C of E" people questioned carde from south of the Thames, in the "mink and mattins" belt. Yours faithfully, H. L. H. TOWNSHEND, 46 The Close,

From the Reverend R. Noves Sir, I object to being a "trendy" clergyman who, somehow, imposes new services on his Church of England congregations.

Parish clergy and committees respond out of duty and loyelty to the collective wisdom of such bodies as the Liturgical Commission and the respective Houses of the General Syund. If it is suggested that the new," services will assist the mission of the Church then it is at least our duty to study them and produce sound reasons why not to introduce them.

Such loyalty may seem naive and misplaced but it is, Sir, necessary. We have to trust our headquarters with the logistics while we get on with the simpler; but not infrequent, problems of maintaining parish life.

True, we report back from time to time In this place, we say, we find all the alternatives in your serroice to be confusing. Here, we sey, couples don't choose the new marriage service. What a pity, we sadly note, that within three miles of here are five congregations all But in the end we trust that some-body sees a wider picture and leads us accordingly. Yours faithfully,

ROGER NOYES, The Vicarage, Church Lane Boroughbridge, North Yorkshire. June 12.

From the Reverend C. G. Sykes Sir, No priest, certainly, requires Professor David Martin or a Times leader to tell him what he already knows perfectly well about "consumer reaction". The fact remains that the Authorized Version is but a translation (however remarkable a one) of an inadequate text of the Bible, while the Book of Common Prayer (whatever its other virtues may, be) reflects the now all too obvious theological misunderstandings and the strife of the centuries which saw it come to birth.

House of Lords reform From Sir Nigel Fisher, MP for Kineston-upon-Thames, Surbiton From Mr J. A. Gulland Sir, In your excellent set of articles

Kingston-upon-Thames, (Conservative)
Sir, May I support my colleague, Sir Brandon Rhys Williams (June 7), in his plea for reform of the House of Lords. If, as seems probable, abolition becomes the official policy of the Labour Party, it will be difficult on any logical or democratic basis to defend the House of Lords as at present constituted, however well it works in practice. (Conservative)

I accept that there are plausible arguments for inaction: the difficulties of getting agreement on the composition of a reformed House; of getting a Bill through the House of Commons in the face of determined investigation. works in practice. mined opposition; and the amount of parliamentary time which would be needed to do so. But I believe the obstacles to reform are out-weighed by the dangers of single-Chamber government should a leftwing socialist administration obtain power on a minority national vote. Disraeli's words: "The House of Commons by itself could never preserve liberty. Alone it might easily become a weapon of despotism and one against which there would be no appeal ... apply with far greater force today than when they were spoken 100 years ago.

Saying the oceans' wealth

on conservation, that by Jon Barzdo on the ocean (June 5) in some ways paints too black and too simple a picture. The fact that eight countries must ratify the new convention for the southern ocean is surely do reason for abandoning hope for it. Rather, it is the normal process to ensure that this convention receives full backing from governments. Those concerned for conservation of the environment should welcome the fact that countries are trying to take action before exploits. tion has begun to any significant ex-tent (present krill catches are very small in comparison to the size of the resource). Whether they will: succeed depends very much on how well we can understand this, and other, marine ecosystems. Our present knowledge is inadequate. For example, it is generally accepted that the drastic decline in haddock in the western Atlantic in the ninetoen sixues was due to tooheavy fishing, bur at the same time haddock in the North Sea. which was equally beavily fished. Why is not known. . . . It is clear that, in general terms species interact so that over-fishing of one species is likely to be followed by increases in others. For example, there 'are 'how twice 'as many minke whales in the Autarctic as there ever were before 1950, presumably due to reduced competition with the larger whales. The collapse of the Peruvian anchovy has been followed by increases in sardine, hake and other species, and (since the anchovy catches all went for fish meel and sil) an increase in the supply of fish from Peruvian waters for direct human consumption. The problem is we do not know which species, if any, will increase and by how much, and, if the changes are undesirable, whether they can be reversed. Until we understand better how the marine ecosystem works we are unlikely to manage it successfully.

June 12.

The International Whaling Commission provides an example; it was set up in 1946 with excellent intentions, but because governments did not support adequate re-search into whale stocks; the Inter-national Whaling Commission did not, during the nineteen-fifties, have adequate advice on how quotas and other management procedures should be modified. It, therefore, failed to take action at a time when these actions could have been achieved relatively painlessly. I hope we have now learnt the lessons that not only must we establish machinery to control our greed, but that there must be adequate research to ensure that proper control decisions are taken and have the desired effects. Britain has, in the past taken a leading part in the scientific research necessary for the rational utilization of fish stocks and other living resources. It is hoped that part of its contribution to the new conservation strategy will be to continue and strengthen this research. Yours faithfully,

JOHN GULLAND. Chief, Marine Resources Service, Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, Via delle Terme di Caracalia, 00100 Roms, ...

Public ownership of the press

From Professor I. R. Christie Sir. You report today (June 7) that leaders of the largest printing uplon are being urged to adopt public ownership of the press as a constitutional objective.

If any group thinks that unions are not getting a fair deal in the press, then let them float their own newspapers, and see if they can sell them. But let it not think of ramming its propaganda down the throats of the people through a public monopoly. This country would be desperately near to totalitarian dictatorship before that could happen. Have the proposers of this folly learned nothing from the development of samizdat in Soviet Russia? Do they think that the people of this country would quietly abandon their liberties to that entent? Their suggestion is enough to set that "friend of liberty" and darling of earlier generations of radicals, John Wilkes, turning in his grave. Labour politicians who wish to preserve the credibility of their party ought to make clear their ming its propaganda down the party ought to make clear their devotion to the basic principles of British government by an inequivo-cal condemnation of this idea.

Words, words, words From Dr Neil Smith

Suffolk.

Sir, Mrs Wilding's invective lament at the demise of linguistics (June 9) is premature. Linguistics is a technical and specialized discipline concerned with an over-familiar subject. The fact that every individual speaks a language makes him feel an expert, but this ability is as much an indication of insight into linguistics as the ability to count is of proficiency in mathematics.

There is now, however, no shortage of lucid introductory texts aimed at the unprejudiced layman. The success of these books is revealed by the fact that my association's meetings are excellently amended: both by professionals (whether self-indulgent or not) and by many amateur scholars and members of the tesching profession. Further, linguistics is flourishing in the universities, its healthy status being most clearly scen pre-cisely in its close links with those subjects—philosophy, nsychology and physics—that Mrs Wilding sees absorbing us. These disciplines are, not belping to dismamle linguistics; they are sharing its clan and con-Tributing to its success. Yours faithfully,

Income policy From Mr H. Norris

Sir, Lady Wootton's "new kind of income policy" (June 11) involving a levy on income increases through the tax system, is an idea hardly worthy of her.

She concedes the problem of pre-viously agreed incremental scales as meriting relief (though is she not aware of the resentment of the anomaly of the privilege of this under previous so-called incomes policy ??). But where are so many other instances of need for relief from an excess tax on one year's increase on the previous year that her scheme is totally impracticable. The impact of overtime, of changes of job, of marriage, are a few of many such impossibilities. The effect of such a tax on the investor's changes in his portfolio policy is, also an interesting thought.

My only point of argument with her is in condemnation of the word policy" in this context. Crude and anomalous restrictions are not worthy of such a designation. :-Yours faithfully, shippers want the Prayer Book for their main act of worship?

Nobody needs a poll to tell them that people do not want the Lord's Prayer chapped and changed. Yet when we come to the wedding service, there is an odd discrepancy between the claims advanced for the popularity of the new alternative service and the over-whelming preference for tradition shown by Gallup. The last wedding I attended throws some light on this particular discrepancy. The bride was told that "Unfortunately [1] the new service is standard." It is not, but who will argue? The same applies to the reading

Meteorology: Sunspots and weather regarded as a grant electrical cir-cuit, with the solid earth provid-ing one electrically conducting The effects of nunspots and their associated solar disturbances on weather are a subject of considerable controversy among meteorologists and atmospheric physicists. Although there is some statistical evidence of such solar-terrestrial effects, no convincing physical mechanism has yet been found to explain them. As a result, meteorologists, among others, have been

Between the lonosphere and the Earth is the lower atmosphere, which is slightly louized by ener-getic particles from doate and is therefore a very weak conductor of electricity. The Earth, and its atmosphere can therefore be envis-aged as a giant spherical "capaci-tor" with two concentric conduct-tor " with two concentric conduct-ing spheres separated by a layer of less conducting an There is no known way that sunspor activity could directly affect the Earth's weather; the carra energy released by the Sun during such disturbances, either as light and heat or in the form of littized gases, is small compared to the energy involved in thunderstorms and winds. Furthermore, little of those radiations penetrates to the bottom of the atmosphere where the weather octurs. Physicists have therefore been forced to look for more indirect links between solar disturbances and the lower atmosphere.

'One such mechanism was suggested by Dr Ralph Markson, of the Massachusers Institute of Technology, two years ago in Nature.' He suggested that clecturical generating effects of thunderstorm somewhere.

Dr. Markson pointed out that an indirect link could operate between the Sun and the weather. Theories of thunderstorm development out that an important factor in the Sun and the development of the Earth is an important factor in the Sun and the development of the Earth is an important factor in the Sun and the development of the Earth is an important factor in the Sun and the development of the Earth is an important factor in the Sun and the development of the Earth is an important factor in the Sun and the development of the Earth is an important factor in the Earth is an important factor in the Sun and the Legituing that results). However, that voltage are known to vary with the min ber of sunspots. Completing the tormous logical chain, therefore thunderstorm development should depend on sunspot sumbers: Dr Markson and Dr M. Muir from the Natal University, now collected more evidence to support that theory. Using satellite measurements of the speeds of joursed gases privelling our wards from the Son, together with simultaneous aircraft measurements of the voltage between the lonosphere and the Earth, they have found that in general, the faster the solar particles, the lower the voltage difference. The next stage is to examine the link between that voltage differ ink between that voltage difference and munderstorm development. For obvious reasons, measurements inside thunderstorms are hard to obtain. However, a programme of satellite and ground monitoring, together with contributions from a few intrepid aviators should not only increase the understanding of thunder storm processes—a valuable

England, trying to forget the bad memorics of the previous regard in the Stacko Communale and the resulting meeting of the European disciplinary authorities in Rome, went visiting the local wine growing area today. anguish and discomfort to the team.

Immediately after the event the combination of booliganism that led to riot police using taaraas, and a disappointing one-one draw with Beigium in their first European Campionship game the atmosphere here was grim, with first reactions understandably resential. Ron Greenwood the England manager, had melicwed a little by this morning and said perhaps he had "gone a bit haywire" after the game when speaking of taking the unwanted followers on a boat into the ocean and "pulling out the plug".

Today Mr Greenwood was still angry enough to say that the hooligans would "kick their own grandmothers", He added: "I have always been prood of my profession, but incidents like this make me feel ashamed. We have done everything to create the

Mottram's nightmare is a nasty dream

By Rex Bellamy
Tennis Correspondent
Romania lead Britain 2—0 in their Davis Cup de at Bristol.
The doubles and reverse singles The doubles and reverse singles have still to be played but Romania must now be favoured to play Crechoslovakia or France for the right to tackle Argentina in the semi-linal round of this world team championship of men's trends. Andrei Dirau made an astomishing and totally admirable recovery to beat John Feaver 1—6, 4—6, 5—3, 3—6, 5—4 in two hours and 32 minutes. Then Illie Mastase played like a dream to defeat Christopher Mottram 6—3, 6—2, 6—4 in an hour and 38 minutes.

6-2, 6-4 in an hour and 38 minutes.

To take the second match first, Nastase played as if the clock had stopped since those giorious days—seven years back—when he was the hest player in the world. He was well prepared for the match and gave it everything he had in terms of concentration and competitive verve. He occasionally took time off for comedy, conversational asides and questioning decisions. But that sort of thing is essential to his best form. For Nastase life has to be a drama or it is not worth living. Motiram had been hanging about waiting for the first match to finish and must have been disheartened when Fraver lost it. He played a good match without quite managing to put a rein on Nastase's registeded. Gate for quite managing to pur a rein on Nastase's relainfied flair for match-winning remns. Nastase could have been in serious trouble had one set slipped away: but he refused to let it happen. Here was all the breathaking racket-control, the sureness of touch, the impish gift for improvisation that we remembered so well. He even we remembered so well. He even served four consecutive aces.
Watching Nastase was like picking up a forgotten classic off the bookshelf and discovering that time had dulled none of its lustre. To change the metaphor, the first match had seemed to be all angry chords—with no melodic patterns, no capacity to charm. But Nastase made up for that.

The day went wrong for Britain when Diran came back from two sets down—and from two-four down in the fifth set—to best Feaver. That was a ponits whom England had besten two-nil in Barcelona recently.

Even though doubts remain about the ability of the team to overcome the stacking loss of Francis and the authority of the mid-field players—Wilkins indispotably apart—England face Italy here on Sunday with the psychological advantage of having scored a goal, which is more than their next opponents can claim. But the more serious challenge is to the local authorities who have to enough that the game, before a full house of over 70,000 instead of yesterday's 15,000, is allowed to run its proper course.

Given that the match has a peaceful background, there is the prospect of a fascinating and hard struggle. As Mr Greenwood pointed out this marning, it is sometimes easier to play against for Romania, especially on grass. It lifted some of the burden of responsibility from Nastase's shoulders and the slight relaxation of psychological pressure made all the difference to his tends when he went out to play Mattram.

tends when he went out to play Montram.
Feaver and Diran are ranked only lifth in their respective countries. Diran, six foot four inches tall, faced the formidable task of playing a Davis Cup singles on an unfamiliar surface on the eve of his 21st birthday (an earlier report had suggested he was 21 aiready). For two sets Feaver played well and was all over him in those two sets, Diran served 10 double faults, volleyed weakly and did not look much of a tennis player.

Doubtless Dirzu was afflicted by nervous tension and a suspicion that he had no cause for confidence. But once he was two picion that he had no cause for confidence. But once he was two confidence. But once he was two sets down he seemed to relax, as if convinced that he might as well have a go. Suddenly he was hitting freely, serving aces instead of double faults, volleying sharply and doing dazzling things with his backhand. He also began to read the rallies fluently. Nuthing had been going right for him. Now nothing was going wrong. In 12 consecutive service games he lost only 12 points and was never taken to deuce. By contrast Feaver began to serve short, lost his rhythm and found himself leaping and lunging in vain pursuit of Dirat's blazing returns. Now it was Feaver who looked the tyro ou grass. He had lost his momentum and his suthority, but he could still work himself into the ground—and ne did. In the fifth set Dirat briefly faltered and Feaver broke to two-one. The next crucial game was the seventh, in which Feaver spent his energy prodigally in a truitless stiempt to achieve the safe margin of a second break.

Mrs Lloyd stands between Mrs Cawley and third title

By Sydney Friskin

The singles final of the women's tennis tournament at Chichester, aponsored by Crossley Carpets, will be contested today by Chris Lloyd of the United States, an accomplished exponent of the arts and graces of the game, and Evonne Cawley of Australia, who for at least 10 years has captivated crowds with her talent and charm. Mrs Cawley will be trying for her third successive title.

Mrs Lloyd defeated Pam Shriver 7—6, 6—2 yesterday in an hour and 20 minutes after a furiously fought match. Mrs Cawley took only an hoar to beat Betty Stove, of the Netherlands, 6—1, 6—4.

On her way to yesterday's semifinal round, Mrs Lloyd had won 17 consecutive matches and said said after her meeting with Miss Shriver: "In the last thres tournaments, I started slowly and got better. Tomorrow I will have to play more aggressively."

Neither Italy not England expect to make many changes; but it would not be surprising to see both managers ask for a touch more aggression. Not that the Italians were particularly affectionate towards Spain, and Keegan especially can expect a bruising A heavily-sliced service followed by excursions to the net was Miss Shriver's main ploy, which some-times brought her outright win-uers; but more frequently, Mrs Lloyd's passing shors left her standing. Still, she fought on gamely, muttering self-critical andes. On her own admission, Mrs Lloyd was at her best in the second set, hitting her returns much deeper with exquisite timing. A break of service in the third game of the first set was an early sign of her ascendancy, but Miss Shriver, attacking strongly on both flanks, broke back to 4-all. Two double faults by Miss Shriver did not help much in the 11th game, which she lost by putting an easy barkhand return into the net.

The early exchanges in the second set brought a strange turn of fortune in service games. Miss Shriver broke back to 2-all, but was love-40 down in the fifth game which Miss Lloyd ended with a brilliant passing shot. Miss Shriver had two break points in the save had two break points in the score, which could wall have been 3-all, went to 4-2 in favour of Mrs Lloyd, who raised her game for another break of service in the seventh game. Even in the eighth, with Mrs Lloyd serving for the match, Miss Shriver had a break point at 30-40, the struggle ending with Mrs Lloyd putting an angled forehand re-

Mrs Cawley said after beating Miss Stove: "I want to do really well and am pleased with the way everything has gone so far. I am playing better than I thought I would?" She was completely unruffled and most shots were delicately returned, particularly on the backhand.

He was beaten in three sets 3—6, 7—5, 4—6 by Victor Pecci from Paraguay who was the fifth seed.

The crucial game in the match was the third in the deciding set, after each man had won a set. The score was 1—1, and just as it seemed that Tander was about to seemed that Tander was about to bring up his celebrated service artillery he lost the game to love on his service. This quarter final had sharply distinctive phases. Smith, who also won at Wimbledon in 1972, has been unable over the years to keep in the very front rank. Playing yesterday with a rivesided, fibre glass racket which in shape, although not in substance, looked rather like a museum piece he kept pace with Gerulaitis for two sets, but then faded. The match went almost mechanically with service until the twelfth game when Gerulaitis, leading 6—5, broke through to take the set match went almost mechanically with service until the twelfth game when Gerulaitis, leading 6—5, broke through to take the set 7—5. Smith netted too many forehand drives in that set, but his gentle diagonal volleys at the net were a delight.

In the second set the succession of winning services continued until the score was 4—4. Gerulaitis, serving, led 40—love, but Smith then rattled off five points with shots that travelled fast down the sidelines. He thus had his first break of service, and led 5—4. In the next game rellies swung from the baseline to the net and from side to side. Smith, serving now for the set, pulled up to deuce from 15-40, and then had four set points, but yielded them all—one with a bell that clipped the top of the net but fell on the wrong side. On his fifth attempt he took the set with a high backhand volley, well out of Gerrhabite's reach.

The fourth semi-finalist is Kim Warwick, an Australian who was a pupil of Vic Edwards, when he was coach to Evonns Goolagong, now Mrs Cawley. Today he is a "vetteran" of 28. Warwick has come through an easier part of the draw, having met no seeded players on the way; but his defeat, 6—3, 6—2 of Peter Rennert, an American nearly saven years younger, was quick and anthoritative. He now meets Gerulaitis in the semi-final.

Leaders taking rhumb-line across Atlantic By John Nicholls The leaders in the Royal

Western/Observer singlehanded transationic race are now well out into the ocean, almost a week after starting from Plymouth. Most of them; according to the Argos, satellite tracking system. teem to be sailing along the rhumb-line, which is the shortest distance between two points across the earth's curved surface. This suggests they are confident of finding favourable wind along this course when it is often thought better to go farther south and gamble on more belpful winds, making up for the greater distance salled.

Still leading is Philip Weld, in his 51-foot trimaran Moxie, followed by Eugene Riguidel, in a 52-foot trimaran and Olivier de Kersauson in a 54-foot monthull. de Kersauson's boat is followed by three more trimarans and is very much the mest in a multihull sandwich. ### Reinforced Lions can win and defy precedents From Richard Streeton

Bloemfontein, June 13 It the British Isles team avoid the mistakes that cost them the match at Cape Town a formight ago, there is every justification for thinking they can win the second international here tomorrow and level the series against South Africa. Victory is excepted South Africa. Victory is exsential if the tour is to retain its competitive interest. Certalaly it is a far stronger Lions side on duty and, if further injuries can be avoided, they are capable of winning here and going on to defy historical precedents by winning the force and going on the force are the force and going on the force are the force are the force are the force and going on the force are the force are the force are the force and going on the force are the f be four-match rubber.

No team in South Africa has ever won a series after losing the first match. In fact the only side ever to come from behind in this cortext anywhere in the world were the Springboks in New Zea-land in 1937. They lost the first game of a three-match series but went on to win the next two, Even the most biased South African is wary of predicting a vin for the Springboks after the form the Lions showed last Sat-urday against Transvaal. For the first time the touring side played 15-man rugby worthy of them and ir was no coincidence that this came about when they were at full strength for the only occasion on this tour. By the end Richion on this tour, by the cha kico-ards had become the latest cas-nelty and he will be missed to-morrow but the presence of Dav-ies at Stand-off and Irvine at full back made all the difference. South Africa ran the ball far

Town. On the harder ground and in the rarified atmosphere here, they can be expected to revert more to type, with the play kept tight and every opportunity given to Botha to use his kicking ability at stand-off. The Lious appreciae they were spared the best of Botha at Cape Town but the Springboks must win regular possession and this they seem unlikely to do, especially from the rucks and mauls. South Africa have strengthened their lineout potential by bringing de Klerk into their team but it is a change made at the expense of other things in their team but it is a change made at the expense of other things in the tight and loose.

It was the frustrations the South Africans experienced in their forward work that prompted them to seek clarification from Mr Pal-mace, the French referee, about some of the penalty decisions that went against them a fortulght ago. Today Springbok officials, at the eleventh hour, decided against persuing the request for a meeting with Mr Palmade. Thankfully, what might have proved a controversial and embarrassing mattroversial and embarrassing matter has been quietly shelved.

Rugby League Fulham to apply

for place in second division By Keith Macklin

They said they were not joking, and they were not. Fulbam are to make application to the Rugby League for inclusion in the second division during the season after next_ 1981-82.

The Fulham Football Club's Chief marketing executive, Malcolm Macdonald, said yesterday: " This is a serious application. We have the financial backing, and the decision has been made only after the most careful discussions. We have loked at all the problems, and we believe they can be overcome."

One of the more pressing probiems will be that of travel to and from the north of England. However, Mr Macdonald pointed out that the Rugby League club at Craven Cottage would less than double the existing travelling expenses incurred by the football club. As far as northern clubs were concerned, their trips to London would be one per season. which was hardly a severe burden. The proposed Fulham ciab had drawn up a list of players, many of them experienced, who might be willing to sign, and the mystery man, described as "a household name in Rugby Lesgue". would have charge of affairs. The application will go before the annual meeting of the League at Harrogate at the end of the month.

Russia drop out because of their 'lack of form'

From Jim Railton Lucerne, June 13 Lucerne's Red Lake-

Locerne's Red Lake—the Rotsie—is a strangely ironic site because the Russians will not be there. Their traffer fully laden with boats, arrived here but it appears the team has not. The president of the Russian Rowing Union, Mr Kabanor, stated: "The corsmen were not in their best form". Lucerne is normally the world's best and fairest course and can attract an entry more severe than the ensuing Olympic and world championships.

This year, sadly, has a special significance and Lucerne's norday regatta will have an atmosphere to rival Rick's Cafe Americain in the splendid film Casablanca. Over 30 nations compete, including the Clympic Doycott Countries of West Germany, the United States, Norwey, Canada and New Zealand, with 12 hater.

England may sacrifice Gower in search for a new champion

By John Woodcock
Cricket Correspondent
The most widely expected change in the England team for the second Test man a against West Indies, starting at Lord's next Thursday, is Mike Gatting for David Gower. This would not for David Gower. This would not much affect the mobility of the side, and Gatting has been in fine form with the hat; but it will be sad to see Gower go. Emburey, like Getting a member of the successful Middlesex side, and the successful Middlesex side, the successful Middlesex side, the successful Middlesex side, the state of the successful Middlesex side, t is also on the shortlist, as is Amiss; and if a replacement is sought for Lever it may mean the return of Old. There is some concern about further weakening the fielding, which started to decline first when Edmonds lost his place and then when Randall did. At Trent Bridge it was rather ordinary and, although Gatting fields energeti-cally and throws very well, the is no longer quite so of

In his first 21 Test innings Gower scored 1,140 runs at an average of 60. That was against New Zealand, Pakistan, Australia (without Lillee) and India. In his last 12 he has scored 196 for an average of 17.9, 98 of them one afternoon in Sydney when he fluished by playing like Sobers in all his glory.

Such a talent as Gower's is so

Such a talent as Gower's is so rare, and so scarce are batsmen remotely capable of quelling this West Indian attack, that I would be inclined to hold on to him. The selectors are more likely to take the view that he must go away and start to make some runs for Leicestershire, and learn that his feet are there to be moved and not merely stood upon.

Whoever replaces Gower it will he asking a tremendous lot of him. Should it be decided to think only he asking a tremendous lot of him. Should it be decided to think only of the present, and to forget the fielding. Amiss might be the best bet. In spite of a nightmarish record against Lillee, which continued when he was playing for Packer, he did score a double hundred when he played against least, at the Oval in 1976, and his confidence against fast bowling, so low at one time, has been somewhat restored by the helmet he now wears.

Amiss is 37 and, as it were, disposable. At 23, Gatting is a comparative fledgling, and tough as he is it would be the greatest pity if he were to be set back by coming into the side too soon. Young men succeeding in as hard as a school as this, against Holding and company, are going to be few and far between, and stready there is one in the side. Tavaré, trying to do it.

ing knocks on the fingers and body Bruce Laird, the Australian, got somewhere near to making it last winter, and Kim Hughes scored 130 not out on a slow pitch in Brisbane; but by the end of even a three-match series both had had just about enough.

For the moment I would either retain Gower or bring in Amiss. The selectors, for their part, will almost certainly go for Garting, and if in this series he does make the grade we can be fairly sure that we will have found a Champion—as we can be fairly sure that we will have found a Champion—as we can be if Tavaré does. In the other departments the selectors' problems are the same as they were before the first Test match. If either Emburey or Underwood comes in for Lever, we are left with three faster bowlers, Wilkis, Hendrick and Botham, who are not fully fir. There are various alternatives: to retain Lever and leave out Hendrick; to bring in Old and leave out both Lever and Hendrick; to keep four faster bowlers and introduce Emburey—or Underwood—for Willey, though that would reduce the batting; or even to bring in Richard Williams of Northamptonshire, who bowls off breaks and scored a century against praig in Kichard Williams of Northamptonshire, who bowls off breaks and scored a century against the West Indians last month, to place of Willey, Whatever they decide, the selectors have a diffi-cult side to choose.

Universities fail against West Indian attack

Bv Peter Marson CAMBRIDGE: The West Indians beat the Combined Universities by

The all powerful West Indians made short work of the young cautiemen from the universities of Oxford and Cambridge on another marvellously sunny day at Fenner's yesterday. The West Indians had declared overnight at their total of 218 for two, and when Mubarak and Mills came to when Mubarak and Mills came to the crease to begin again in the morning it was hazy and close. Roberts and Croft bowled menacingly and we had time to see one splendidly defiant cover drive to the boundary by Mubarak, off Roberts, before he was gone well caught by Haynes at third slip off a fast rising ball from Croft. The universities' bassmen found Croft's pace and lift off the pitch exceedingly difficult to cope with and after Mills followed quickly, caught behind off Croft, Parry was off the rest.

Boyd-Moss and the captain,

Peck, brought the universities into luncheou at 54 for five but their stand of 24, which was the size of the bassmen's laboured resistance, faltered at the start to the aftermoon period when Peck became the first of the remaining five wickets to fall for 12 runs. Parry bowled excellently and, supported by some fine close catching, took five wickets for 22.

New Embassy to carry Balding's flag with dash in York sprint

By Michael Seely

New Embassy can win this afternuon's William Hill Trophy at York for Toby Balding. This old Sayyaf, who has since won listed race, with £10,000 added, is the highlight of the tenth anniversary of Timeform's charity day in aid of cancer relief. The six furlong dash is always a cut 100bs to the winner. If Premier six furlong dash is always a cutthroat affair, but this year it presents an even more compli-cated appearance than usual.

the Prix de Diane de Revlon (French Oaks) but I feel this might be put right on Sunday at Chantilly as I expect the 44-year-old Englishman to end up in the Balding's sprinters are carry-ing all before them. Escovich will be trying for his third conwinners enclosure on Mrs Penny, who is trained by lan Balding, in secutive victory in the Woking-ham Stakes at Ascot next Friday. Major Richard Hern, who won the 1974 Prix de Diane with the royal filly. Highclere, will saddle Dancing Shadow for the ten and a half furling event and she will be ridden by the in form Willie Carson. If the Scotsman wins on Dancing Shadow, he will have taken his fifth classic of the season. Of the French-trained fillies, I have preference for Paranete, Laquiola, who will be coupled for win bets with Bendcia, Hortensia and Luth de Saron, while Bev Bev could be an interesting outsider. At Both this afternoon, Alpine Rocket will be bidding for a fifth success off the reel. At Kempton, New Embassy showed himself to be hitting peak form at the right time when finishing a close fourth

Harwood and Starke to lift the main prize

By Michael Phillips

Racing Correspondent Trafalgar House Limited has put up the bulk of the prizemoney at Sandown Park today. A year and Gus. Harwood and Grewile Starkey won their principal price, the Trafalgar House Handicap with Haul Knight and I will not he surprised if history rapeats itself and they win it again, this. time with Herons Hollow who has won both his races this Rarwood has never regretted raying as much as 30,000 guineas for this colt by Wolver Hollow even though he saw no return on that outlay at all last ceason. His patience is now beginning to reap a reward. An easy victory at Doncaster in March told us little other than that Herons Hollow was useful. Much more pertinent was useful. Much more pertinent was his last performance at Salisbury on the day before the D. by. Or, that occasion he romped away with the Tryon Handicap

All in all it was a supre All in air if was a supre-encouraging performance w leads me to think that He licitow can win again this a noor even though his weight risen to 9st 51b. Anyone who cies my selection can take fort from the knowledge those intimately imprised. those intimately involved both in sparkling form at down yesterday.

By Derring Do, Dooble locks another good investmen Helena Springfield Limited had, those good fillies One Million, Odeon and Reprocol training last year. They are at stud and happily in for such desirable stallions as I aleo, Irish River and Tal Wood. Before racing began terday the Tote was into with big bets on Steve Ca to become the leading: jock Royal Ascet next week 2: 2 much so that they were for the begin odds to 14-1. irim their odds to 14-1.

Mortgages are higher, caused by the general willingness to accept lower profit margins. Many consumer durables are imported and the strength of sterling has allowed foreign companies to hold down prices in recent months after a period nigher, caused by the general increase in interest rates, local authority rates have risen because of increasing costs and reduced government grants, and council rents have been pushed up by cuts in subsidies.

The Government hopes that mortgages will come down later in the year as interest rates start to fall. It is estimated that the increase in housing

Government set to announce Zimbabwe £2,000m N Sea gas pipeline debt solution

Plans to build a £2,000m pipeline to collect gas from 12 North Sea fields are to be announced by the United King-dom Government next week. A joint study by British Gas and Mobil presented to the De-partment of Energy in April recommended a scheme to collect the gas produced from a string of oil fields stretching from British Petroleum's Magnus field in the north to Fulmar in the south which would otherwise be flared wastefully. The recommendation effec-tively overturned an earlier tively overturned an earlier conclusion in a specially com-missioned consultants' report that a large gas gathering scheme would prove unprofitthat a settlement may be near. The week-long talks covered debts incurred before UDI was declared in November 1965, which the Mugabe government has officially inherited and agreed to honour. £50m of intergovernment loans and £50m arrears of capital and interest on Southern Rhodesian bonds due to about 13,000 United Kingdom people are at issue. ### BEPRICE CHANGES Minister finds widespread agreement on the needs of the industry

Engineering the way to a united profession Daunting was not an adjective used in yesterday's House of Commons debate on the Finniston committee's proposals for engineering, when Mr Michael Marshall. junior minister at the Department of Industry, gave an interim report on the Government's weighing of the professional, academic and industrial implica-But it clearly could be applied to the mountain of advice—often conflicting—accumulated during consultation now ended with 370 organizations, and unsolicited views.

Mr Marshall said there was widespread 'agreement with the diagnosis of the ills manufacturing industry and the engineering profession made by the committee, chaired by Sir Monty Finniston. Industrialists and their organizations, whose commitment the department re-guared as critical, had with the unions, been as responsive on the issues as anybody, Mr Marshall said. And an enthusiasm could be discerned for im-

one of fundamental reservations aboutwhat in detail should actually be done.

There were those who felt it unnecessary to be as radical as some of the Fin-niston proposals, the central one of which is the setting up of a new statutory engineering authority, to oversee standards in the engineering profession and bridge gaps with industry and the academic world.

The alternative was to capitalize on the strengths of the present framework for the profession, whose umbrella body is the Council of Engineering Institutions

The majority opinion broadly favoured a national framework like an engineering authority, Mr Marshall said. While a new body would face formidable problems and would by no means be assured of success, the goodwill and momentum for change resulting from the Finniston inquiry was likely to be dissipated and might be diffi-provements and a willingness to achieve cult to recover without such a focus.

The heart of the conflict is how the Mr Marshall described the problem as new authority is constituted, with equally strong please-according to each organizations own interests-for an orientation towards industry or academic interests or the profession itself. .

There was mostly agreement, according to Mr Marshall, about the size of the authority's governing board—around 15 to 29 people—and that its members should independent and untied to sectional interests.

But many clearly had reservations about whether, as suggested by Finniston, ap-pointments should be made by the Government after consultation.

It had been suggested that instead the Privy Council should take on the role, and in an argument in its favour which emerged in the debate, it was said that the danger of an authority being responsible to too many government ministers would be avoided.

The success of the Abbey Life £405m Property Fund— it passed the £400m mark during the week—can be attributed both to capital appreciation from underlying property as well as favourable rent reviews. Commenting on the perform-ance, Mr Peter Dyson, director of Abbey Life Investment Services, said: "We cannot see this continuing for much lon-

Honesty and job references

Do I have to give a reference to a former employee who has left of her own accord after left of her own accord after aimest a year? I felt uneasy about her when money disappeared twice unaccountably and although I had no direct proof I felt that she was the most likely suspect. In fact I was quite refleved when she left to get married. I have now received a standard form letter from another firm requesting a reference but I do not feel it reference but I do not feel it would be fair to tell them that she, was entirely satisfactory. Would you advise me to (a) ignore their request or (b)

state the facts above? (HF, Manchester). Aithough as a former emobliged to give a reference, you are not required to do so by law. If you state what you suspect in a letter the innuendo is that you considered her untrustworthy. In any other situation it would be regarded as defamatory and the girl would be entitled to compensation.

However, the law regards a reference as a privileged docu-ment and you are protected from such a claim provided you from such a claim provided you honestly believe what you say in the letter and do not do so out of malice. A reference should always be marked private and confidential and addressed to the anguirer by his correct name and initials. So as to avoid the letter being opened by anyone else in the opened by anyone else in the

In 1970 I went to work for an international company overseas and because of the location of our house at that time (no rail-way close at hand) we were advised to sell rather than letadvised to sell rather than letor leave empty. One year later
I realized the folly of the advice and purchased in the joint name of my wife and myself a house from plans. In July 1972 we returned from overseas and went straight into the house. However, in September of the same ear we returned overseas and have worked overseas ever since and the house has been let continuously.

In May 1978 my wife had to return to the United Kingdom to be with our trenage daughter and in June purchased a small maisonette for cash (foreign currency). Because of a change of location of my employment, but still overseas, we have de-cided to sell the original house and buy another one (more expensive) in which my wife and four children will live.

This specialist readers service has been compiled with the

I am a non-resident for tax purposes but my wife works in England and is therefore clearly resident. We had understood that one spouse could transfer capital to the other without becoming liable for capital gains tax, but now understand that this is not the case if we are

Can you please advise if indeed my wife is liable for capital gains tax on her half of the house or not, as the original house has always been regarded as our principal residence and we are selling in order to pur-chase a family home in which the family will live? The maison-ette will be let until such time as one of our children require it. (FPH, Antilles).

Where husband and wife have different resident status, have different resident status, capital gains tax llability may arise to the resident spouse in respect of jointly owned property. From the information that you provide it is not possible to be completely certain that the principal private residents dence exemption will apply. That exemption is available in respect of periods during which you occupied the property, as your principal residence and your principal residence and it is also available in respect of periods during which you were employed overseas provided that you occupy it both before and after such periods of absence. As the property is now let you are unlikely to be able to satisfy the latter requirement.

It is clearly possible for any question of capital gains tax to be avoided by your wife giving or selling you her half interest in the property. Dispo-sals between husband and wife are not the occasion of charge for capital gains tax even though they may have different resident status.

For capital transfer tax purposes, gifts by a person domi-ciled in the United Kingdom to a spouse not so domiciled and possibly this is what you have in mind.

No question of capital transfer tax would arise if your wife sold her interest in the pro-perty at its market value. If you decide to take this action, you should consult a selicitor as a gift or sale by your wife would normally attract stamp duty at 2 per cent, but this liability can often be eliminated if the transaction takes place shortly before a sale to a third

The above advice is given on the basis that you will be not resident nor ordinarily resident for the year in which you dispose of the property. Problems may arise if a deposal takes place in the year during which a person returns to the United Kingdom unless he has been not resident for 36 months, but from what you say, there should be no problems for you on this score.

Two questions arise. First, the one that the investment trust companies must have been asking themselves: have all the asking themselves: have all the efforts at geeting the business better rknown, all the beating of drums and the baring of souls, been so much time and trouble—and good money—down the drain? And, secondly, the more radical question that investors should be asking themselves; does the adjoint themselves: does th ediscount

The trusts have had two problems in deciding how to spend their time, trouble and good money. First, there is the fact that they cannot spend it on making themselves known to the private investors who always used to be the mainstay of the business. By law, investment trust equips are not investment trust groups are not showed to advertise their shares, which puts them at a serious disadvantage compared with the unit trust groups when it comes to wooing the private

If an "old banges" is up for sale for hundreds of pounds more than its true value, the chances are that the asking price reflects the value of the number plate rather than of the car itself.

Plenty of people—and com-mercial organizations—like to have "personalized" number plates. If you happen to be called John Smith, one claim to fame may be to have the num-ber plate JS1. For some com-panies it is good publicity. Chanal have a delivery vehicle in the London area with the number plate NO 5.

What happens if a car with a valuable number plate is stolen, or the right to transfer the car has been so badly damaged by fire that the chassis number has been obliterated? The loss may amount to some thousands of pounds, although a glance at a Sunday paper will show that many run-of-the-mill numbers change hands for a few hundred pounds.

It is always regrettable to announce a setback in profits, but - as I warned shareholders at the Annual General Meeting - the widening world recession makes it more and more difficult to maintain profit growth. However I can tell you that there has not so far been any significant setback in the level of trading activity in your companies. Generally the volume of sales is being maintained; however margins are being squeezed. I expect the position for the year end to be similar to that for the half year, with trading profits close to last year's level, but pre-tax profits reduced as a result of higher interest charges; also, if current rates of exchange still apply at that time, the strength of sterling will have a further adverse effect. Nevertheless, I reaffirm that I consider the spread of your companies' activities is a sound base for luture progress.

City folk have all but forgotten the bankruptcies and company rescues to come, probably next spring, when the company reporting season is at its height. Then cupboard doors will fly open and skeletons jump out grinning.

Will they? Several brokers inform me that hard-pressed companies have told them that bankers are vying with each other to lend money. So British industry is not to be allowed to go bust after all. Others speak contemptuously of only one or two big engineering or taxille bankruptcies to come. A few are now to be heard saying few are now to be heard saying that there will be none.
So is CBI deputy president Sir John Greenborough wasting his time bemoaning industry's profits crunch?

No. The City cares not whether interest rates come down at the end of July or the beginning of September, but it does expect them, when they do fall, to drop like stones. Meanwhile, companies as varied as Metal Box, 600 Group and Grand Metropolitan all reported encouraging profits this week. It was left to poor Chloride to complain about how motorists are eking out their bat-teries and report tumbling profits and dividend.

Pilkington profits up slightly at £91m

Pilkington Brothers, the international glass group, yesterday revealed profits figures in line with the pessimistic market expectations. For the year to March 1979 profits before tax were only marginally up from were only marginally up from £90.3m; to £91.4m while sales rose from £548m to £629m.

After tax of £20.5m, as against £42.7m the previous year, profits attributable to Pilkington shareholders are up from £45.7m to £68.8m. The rise of mere than 50 per cent at this level is well up in real terms.

On a current cost basis, pro-level is well up in real terms.

On a current cost basis, profits for the year would have been only £51m. The difference is the charge against the cost of sales adjustments and monetary working capital adjustments and a contribution to profits of the gearing adjustment.

Although the second interim dividend has been lifted from 6.5p to 7.9p, making a total for the year of 15p, the shares slipped from 215p to 206p. The Figures show a substan-tial fall in trading profits in the IIK which warre down from

Bamfords says creditors favour liquidation

of collapsed agricultural machinery group Bamfords have been promised a full statement by the board on June 19 on the steps they have taken so far.

Through advisers, Bamfords said vesterday that an informal meeting of major creditors and essential suppliers think a voluntary liquidation rather than a compulsory winding-up was in the creditors' interests.

Hambros and Arthur Young were mandated to ask petition-ing creditor Gardner Steel to withdraw, but the company has said it will make no decision before the official creditors' meeting and will not promise to withdraw it later.

The Swiss Ant and the Cosmopolitan Grasshopper

(Aesop's Fable adapted by Bank Julius Baer).

66 When the ant and the grasshopper looked at the interest rates available in the world, they came to very different conclusions about the best place to invest their money.

The ant chose to receive only a few per cent a year, while keeping his funds in a currency that was carefully safeguarded against the terrible effects of inflation. Over the years he was content with a modest income, secure in the knowledge that the real value of his capital was being maintained.

The grasshopper was far more adventitions and plumped for the sort of interest rate that his grandfathers had never imagined possible. For a few years he lived splendidly, until one day he found that his capital had been grawed away by inflation and that he was virtually penniless.

The moral is, when you are investing substantial capital, it is far better to choose a fundamentally sound investment than a superficially attractive yield.

At Bank Julius Baer, founded in 1890, we are firmly committed to a very Swiss philosophy of money management. What is of supreme importance to us is the long-term strength of our clients' portfolios in an increasingly volatile world investment market; an approach which has led to our being entrusted with the management of funds valued at well over £1,000 million.

Whether you deal with us in London or in Zurich, you can be certain that Bank Julius Baer will manage your money in the prudent, far-sighted way that has made us one of the most successful and respected private banks in Switzerland. For a preliminary discussion about the Baer International Investment Service, contact Clifford Smith in London

A propos the fable above, in the past 6 years the Deutschmark has lost 19% of its value against the Swiss Franc, the Yen 33% the French Franc 34% the USDollar 39% and Sterling 44%.

Discount market ·

The Bank of England gave help on a moderate scale yesterday to relieve a shortage that eventually proved less sizable than had been anticipated in the discount market. Rates for secured money opened at about 16i per cent and for a time it looked as though conditions were proving unexpectedly comfortable. Clearing banks were lenders, on a fair scale and reasonable progress had been made by lunchtime. But the money-flow turned round in the afternoon and a scramble for funds found houses paying up to 17 per cent for secured money withe Interbank climbed at one stage to 25 per cent. Houses finally ruled off within bounds of 17 and 163 per cent.

Foreign exchange report

The dollar finished widely lower on foreign exchanges yesterday, although some central bank intervention during the morning helped to steady the currency. Weakness of the dollar at the outset stemmed from the 1 per cent cut—to 11 per cent—in the United States discount rate.

Sterling fluctuated in a fairly narrow band of $2.3290 to $2.3490 against the dollar, before closing with a net rise of a quarter of, a cent at $2.3420. The "effective" exchange rate index closed 0.1 down at 73.6, however, at the pound eased in terms of most Continentals.

Chunky glasses, which have had such a vogue, are all very well for informal sertings, parties and the general imbibing of Chateau Gunge. But for fine wines and grand dinners, there is to my mind nothing to compare with a simple bowl on a long, elegant stem.

. A designer who excels at this type of glass is Henning Koppel and one of his newest shapes for Orrefors of Sweden would complement both modern and traditional table settings. Finely balanced, and with a minimum of delicate decoration round the base of the bowls, it will please both the wine buff who likes to see the beauty of the wine unimpaired by heavy cutting, and the hostese who likes to have her, table sparkling with fine crystal.

It is one of the designs on display at a new showroom opened at 17-18 Rathbone Place, London W.1. last week, which has the complete collections of Orrefors and of Bing and Grondhal porcelain—the com-pany which specializes in charming figurines and traditional blue and white plates and As it is impossible for stores centrated on manufacturers with a large enough capacity to produce for world markets. That tends to exclude the small craftsmen whose production is limited, so this week I have visited a shop that specializes only in British goods. It is called Naturally British and was opened nearly two years ago by John Blake and Charles Harris at 13 New Row, London WC2, close to the transformed Covent Garden market which opens on June 19 and which will be reviewed in a Times special report on the area next Tuesday. The joint directors, John Blake and Charles Harris, were determined to stock hand-made British goods at all price levels so that tourists could have an alternative to the "mass-pro-duced tat" sold in souvenic shops. They started with a handful of craftsmen and now have 350 specialist suppliers.

The shop is on two levels—clothes and accessories on the ground floor, domestic equip-ment in the basement. For children there are small woolly animals at 75p, lovable grizzly bears with goofy expressions at £22.35, three dimensional wooden puzzles representing groups of giraffe £15.99 or mon-keys in a tree £9.77 (both can be sent by post for an extra £1.20), or heaps of sheep or torroises at £3.98, plus 40p

So I sympathize with those who are shop-starved and I commend to their attention an interior decoration service which may make their search, at least for furnishing fabrics, a little easier.

It is run by Sue Foster who spent a couple of years with a firm of interior decorators before deciding to go it alone and fulfil her ambition to have her own business. She started by selling fabric locally and then began to get requests from further afield for specific designs that customers found
